A Belmont County Justice Swindler. All policy of the Peace just over the river, and inquired of that officer if he could be at the office about $3' o'clock in the evening, remarking that he—the young man—would have some important business to transact. The Justice promised to be present, and the young man took his departure.

At the appointed time the Justice wended his way to the office, expecting to transact some very important business, and in his mind's eye thought he discerned the scales of justice evenly balanced. Prompt to a click of the clock the young man put in his appearance accompanied by another young man and a young lady. The Squire was informed that they were bent on matrimony and wanted to be spliced instanter. The necessary documents were produced and the auptial noose was quickly tied. They at once took their departure, the gentleman who first called handing the Justice an envelope incely sealed and addressed. As soon as the party got out of the building, the Justice of the Peace opened the envelope and, to and behold! it contained one of Uncle Sam's promises to pay to the amount of one dollar. He looked at it, looked at the clock, looked at the clock, looked at the colock, looked, look Silk and Wool Plaids reduced from 50c to 27c. 10 pieces Plain Black Grenadines, worth 40c, at 10c. WHISKY VS. HYDROPHOBIA.—An old man, a little under the weather, and with a bandage tied around one of his hands, came into the city yesterday while under the most intense and painful excitement. He had been bitten by a dog, and was afraid that hydrophobia would be developed. Overdresses & Polonaises oped.

In an evil hour he fell in with some of his old friends who told him that it was unnecessary to waste his money on the physicians, as a good dose of whisky would knock the radies higher than Gilderoy's kite. The prescription, somehow or other, fell in with the tastes of the good old rustic and he declared that the advice was worth acting upon. He accordingly made a bee line for the nearest saloon and gave an order for a pint of the hottest liquor in the shop. He told the bar-keeper that he had "been bitten by a mad dog, and wanted it for medicine." The bar man winked at him and replied that "that's what alis the most of 'em; mad dogs must be thick in your region." But these facetious remarks did not prevent his filling the bottle to the cork, and charging a good, round price for it in the bargain.

The old chap took the precious medicine and went off somewhere so as to sit down and let the two poisons light it out —rot-gut against virus. He kept poking the antidote in rather liberally, and by dark was in a condition to let the old wound rip and do its best against him. The old chap probably slept in the lock up last night.

On Wednesday evening a queer case of mistaken identity came up before Justice, Belville. Several persons had been implicated in a row the previous night, and one of them gave the name of another person as his own. The next day warrants were issued for the arrest of the entire party, and the gentleman whose name had been used without his knowledge or consent was one of the defendants. When he came up for trial the witnesses all swore positively that he was not the man, and he was accordingly discharged.
